Alexandria, Virginia

Dear Mr. Clarke:

For more than a year the Central Intelligence Agency has been considering the selection of a site for its proposed new headquarters building. During these deliberations we received communications from a large number of builders and realtors throughout the metropolitan area of Washington, D. C., and its environs in Maryland and Virginia, offering assistance in finding housing for any of our employees who might find it desirable to relocate their residences to be nearer their place of employment.

The accessibility of the Langley property to the present residences of the great majority of our employees was an important factor in determining our selection of that site, and we do not expect that very many of our people will relocate their homes. I believe it is reasonable to assume, however, that the services of your organization, among others in the area, may be sought by those few who might desire to seek a change.

Your interest in this matter is appreciated.

Sincerely,

L. K. White
Deputy Director
